Program focus

This program enables students to further specialise in teaching (studio) or performing (solo, accompaniment or orchestral playing). Teaching students undertake advanced study in instrumental or vocal pedagogy and teaching experience, and further develop their solo and ensemble playing. Performance students undertake advanced study in recital work, concerto or opera roles and further develop their ensemble playing. Students also prepare a dissertation on a specific aspect of their studies.

Program aims

The program aims to produce graduates who will have a specialised and advanced training in the areas of either music performance or music teaching, who will have the ability to evaluate musical performance and will have developed standards of musical criticism. Graduates will also have developed their intellectual, expressive and executant abilities in relation to music performance or teaching to a very high standard.

Program objectives

On successful completion of the program students should demonstrate:

- highly developed understanding and skills related to either music performance or teaching
- the ability to conceptualise, research and communicate on a specific topic in written and oral forms through the presentation of a dissertation
- intellectual and artistic ability to formulate and express musical concepts in a coherent, lucid and rational fashion.
